TRAINING FOR STUDENTS

How to become a Peer Educator and counteract bullying and cyberbullying
(14-18 years)

Introduction:

(adapted from © 2005 by the United Nations Population Fund)

Peer education is the process whereby well-trained and motivated young people undertake informal or organized educational activities with their peers (those similar to themselves in age, background, or interests). These activities, occurring over an extended period of time, are aimed at developing young people's knowledge, attitudes, beliefs, and skills and at enabling them to be responsible for and to protect their own health.

A young person's peer group has a strong influence on the way he or she behaves.

The credibility of peer educators within their target group is an important base upon which successful peer education can be built. Young people who have taken part in peer education initiatives often praise the fact that information is transmitted more easily because of the educator's and the audience's shared background and interests in areas such as music and popular celebrities, use of the language, family themes (e.g., sibling issues, the struggle for independence), and role demands (e.g., student, team member). Youth peer educators are less likely to be seen as authority figures 'preaching' from a judgemental position about how others should behave. Rather, the process of peer education is perceived as receiving advice from a friend 'in the know' who has similar concerns and an understanding of what it is like to be a young person.

Peer education is also a way to empower young people; it offers them the opportunity to participate in activities that affect them and to access the information and services they need to protect their health.

Peer education, when done well, is an excellent example of a youth-adult partnership. Successful peer education is indeed about young people and adults working together to achieve the goals of a programme.

Peer-educators can help turn the tide on bullying by creating a safer, more compassionate school community.

V module

Pragmatics of Human Communication

The main subjects to be dealt with during the course are:

- the black box concept;
- the circularity of communication;
- the axioms of communication;
- non-verbal communication;
- the process of communication;
- the obstacles of communication;
- active listening.

Given that the educational aim is, alongside the necessary transfer of concepts and means, activation of dialogue and discussion among participants, the use of interactive methodology is strongly recommended.

This objective is achieved using tools such as practice sessions and role games, but above all by dividing the students into sub-groups for the elaboration of reflections on the concepts presented.
